THE RISE & FALL OF ANTOINE JONES

Antoine Jones, a hardworking law-abiding citizen, community leader, Department of Recreation Area Supervisor, mentor, and more, is convinced by his friends that he has the leadership and business savvy to make a great drug boss after working all his adult life. Strangely, two Jamaican drug Queenpins looking for security and muscle in their new territory cross Antoine Jones' path as they flash over millions of dollars. They ask Antoine if he wants to learn the drug game and make millions. Little does Antoine Jones realize this will become his rise and fall in the drug game as kingpin status awaits him.

SYNOPSIS

The year is 1989. The Washington, DC crews were falling left and right by their own hands. The city had become the murder capital of the nation. The city became divided and vulnerable. At the center of it all was the illegal drug trade.

Out of towners (the Jamaican posse's, Miami Boys and New Yorkers) were moving in to take over DC and fill all the voids. DC's own Antoine Jones had been watching the game from afar. He was familiar with and respected by the local drug dealers.

Antoine observed the drug dealers' recklessness with their stacks of money. Many people that he knew drove luxury cars, had designer clothes and expensive jewelry, but no assets. These guys were eager to follow Antoine because he was a very knowledgeable and wise leader.

Antoine's brother and his nephew's crews were making big money. They were making more money in a single day than Antoine was making, in months, working two fulltime jobs. For ten years, he worked hard with two full time jobs.

Even after picking up a third job, he still had not reached his goals or accomplished his dream of becoming a millionaire so that he could retire, take care of his family, and enjoy life.

One day while coming home from his third job Antoine fell asleep and crashed his car, almost killing himself. At that moment Antoine said enough was enough! After recovering, he asked his nephew to take a ride around Mellon Street. It was one of the roughest and most drug saturated, money-making strips in the city. What he saw prompted him to jump into the game. He had a plan to make a million dollars and get out of the drug game without anyone ever knowing he was involved. Little did Antoine know there are rises that capture you and falls that drain and destroy everything around you, in the drug game!
